

Custom Molded Earphones

Posted by ikazuchi - 19 Mar 2014 13:20

Does anybody have any experience with these? I've seen them ranging from $50 to $200 and have no idea where to put my money.

Thanks- Marc

=====

Re: Custom Molded Earphones

Posted by cbuzzetti - 14 Apr 2014 08:06

Customs are the way to go. Really cuts down on outside noise, are more comfortable than foamies and sound better.

=====

Re: Custom Molded Earphones

Posted by AgRacer - 14 Apr 2014 13:45

I know a few friends from flight school that went the custom molded route and they loved it. We use an earplug now that has a speaker in it so it both cuts down on outside noise and pipes in ICS and radio chatter much more clearly. I dont wear ear plugs in my race car cuz normally its not that loud, but since I've started driving in traffic much more, I've noticed that has more of an effect so I might switch to wearing ear plugs. I've never had an issue with cheap foamies, but they aren't very durable. The generic reusable ear plugs that have been size fitted and look like an acorn have worked much better when I remember to grab them.

=====

Re: Custom Molded Earphones

Posted by ikazuchi - 14 Apr 2014 15:17

Anybody have the Sampson Racing ones? Any other suggestions on a vendor for these?

www.sampsonracing.com/Fully_custom_ear_b...tom%20ear%20buds.htm

Re: Custom Molded Earphones

Posted by cbuzzetti - 14 Apr 2014 19:54

Yes I use the Sampson ones. They work great and Shawn and Morgan are easy to deal with.

You do have to pour the mix into your ear to get the impression. It feels weird and it is only for a few minutes as I recall.

It takes a couple of weeks to get the final product back and you also get the impressions back if you need to make another pair.

Re: Custom Molded Earphones

Posted by Big Dog - 15 Apr 2014 05:09

I, too, use the Sampson kit. While I so hate to admit it, Mr. Buzzetti is correct about Shawn and Morgan. Great peeps. They support us racers and have earned my support with their radio knowledge. They helped us at Nationals to expand our radios with a third rental radio for Lil'Kat's father as crew and it worked out great.

Another thought too. I got Lil'Kat a Stilo helmet from Shawn that has ear cups built in. She loves them and they are very comfortable for her. The helmet was more expensive than the one I purchased but she does not need to spend money on the custom molded ear plugs and one less thing to remember to get into the car and to put on and hook up. I will be going that route in the future.

Big Dog
